Research Interests

Hierarchies; Diversity, equity, and inclusion; Race, gender, and intersectionality; Leadership; Backlash; Discrimination; Social norms; Intergroup relations

My work explores how race and gender interact to influence (1) how individuals are perceived and evaluated, (2) how individuals bring their own identities into the workplace to affect behavior, and (3) the implications these evaluations and behaviors have for career advancement. Current work includes how race impacts backlash against woman leaders, when and how opportunities for employee voice are linked to greater feelings of inclusion among women and racial minority workers, and how the content of gender role expectations varies within different racial groups. My work highlights the importance of understanding how employees' many social identities, such as race and gender, interactively impact their experiences and outcomes in the ever-diversifying context of the modern organization.
